The chat summary from the ticket indicates that the customer requested a refund on the basis that the color of the item was incorrect, without any mention of non-delivery or receipt issues. The fraud risk score assigned to the transaction is 0.15, indicating a low likelihood of fraudulent activity. No refund has been issued to the customer, and the merchant's records confirm that the request was addressed through the closed ticket rather than a monetary reversal.

The combination of a confirmed delivery, available proof of delivery, a low fraud risk score, and the absence of any non-delivery claim in the customer's communication supports the merchant's position that the chargeback claim of fraud is unfounded. The merchant has fulfilled its obligations by delivering the product to the correct address, providing verifiable delivery documentation, and responding to the customer's concern about product color through the established support channel. Consequently, the evidence demonstrates that the transaction was legitimate, the service was rendered as agreed, and there is no basis for a chargeback under the fraud category.
